Go one on one with Salem Five's virtual financial adviser. (Salem Five Cents Savings Bank's One on One Banking program will allow customers to manage investment portfolios via the Internet)

TEXT:

The 142-year-old Salem (Mass.) Five Cents Savings Bank got its name from the value of some of its early deposits. These days it's keeping a few steps ahead of the biggest banks in using the latest Internet techniques to deliver leading-edge financial services. It had a Website in early 1996, when most bankers didn't even know what the World Wide Web was. It offered remote banking from PCs in the same year.

If all goes as planned, this month Salem Five will become the first bank to enable its customers to plan and manage their investment portfolios over the Internet. The new program, called One on One Banking, comes from Vertigo Development Group of Cambridge, Mass., which has ties to Standard & Poor's, the financial information icon almost as old as the billion-dollar Salem Five. S&P will provide online asset-allocation advice and price updates and research reports on thousands of investment vehicles. Fleet Financial Group has also made a strategic investment in Vertigo's technology, and Security First Network Bank, Atlanta, has said it is incorporating One on One into the forthcoming upgrade of its Virtual Financial Manager suite.

Investment advice--confidentially

Advice will be tailored to individual customers, who initiate the service by entering a financial profile at their PCs. Thereafter, the system compares their current portfolio with the one S&P asset-allocation model (out of 38) calculated to most-closely match their profiles. The profile asks for demographics (age, family, income, home ownership, etc.) along with other investment criteria such as financial goals and risk tolerance--about 20 questions in all. The customers' name and the profile data never leave their PC's hard disk, which Vertigo people say provides the ultimate in confidentiality. What the system sees is a set of statistics about an unidentified user. When these statistics match criteria that the bank establishes (e.g., age 22-35, married, two incomes $75,000 - $150,000, don't own a home, planning to buy a home, etc.), the bank's server delivers an advisory or promotional message the next time the customer visits the bank's One on One Website.

One on One banking is a software application that resides on the customer's PC. She downloads it, then goes offline to enter profile data and create an investment plan. When she wants to get current stock or bond prices or some other information from S&P, she goes to her bank's Website and it. That's when One on One's software agents get a chance to take a look and see if this client's profile statistics match the criteria of her marketing messages.

As this customer goes along, she also enters transaction data from statements--i.e., she now owns 500 more shares of XYZ. The system takes this into a running portrait of how well her actual portfolio matches her investment plan--as shown in the accompanying sample of a PC screen. The two graphs on this screen show the customer's progress in making the tax-deferred-assets portion of her current portfolio match the target allocation from S&P.

The screen also shows how she's progressing in taking the specific portfolio-balancing steps she planned earlier with S&P's electronic help. If she wants to reach her overall investment goals, she still has to increase her holdings of large-cap stocks by $7,600, of long-term bonds by $5,000, and of intermediate-term bonds by $20,000. Good luck!

If she clicks on any of the advisories, she will get a report on her present holdings, along with help in locating possible investments that fit into her plans. The bank can program the software to include any of the bank's offerings that apply. Stock and mutual fund prices are continuously updated with a 15-minute delay. She can drill down to published details of any fund or company offering, and she can request comprehensive reports from S&P. (There may be a charge for more than a certain number of reports.)

Keep them coming back to the site

"I want to give our customers a good reason to bookmark our Website and check it out every day," says Salem Five vice-president Mike Fitzgerald, stressing "every day." He markets his Website as a product. His strategy here is to establish ongoing personal relationships with serious self-service investors. Along these lines, Salem Five has created a brokerage facility and is planning to offer insurance products.

Vertigo President Rob Rosen stresses the difference between his I-Casting (for Intelligent Casting) technology and the typical "push" technology that asks users what they want and then helps them find it or do it. Typical investors don't have the professional knowledge to know what to ask for, he says. I-Casting rounds up and presents only the information its financial experts feel sure you need based on your goals and present circumstances.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 14 /PRNewswire/ -- When reba.com premieres November 18, internet users will experience the ultimate in online entertainment and communication. Reba.com uses the latest internet technology to give users a new way to experience Reba.

"In planning the website, we spent a great deal of time researching available technology and getting feedback from Reba's fans. Our goal is for the site to be highly entertaining while offering users the opportunity to interact with other members within the Reba online community," said James Dutil, director of multimedia. "The site features audio, video, Shockwave and Flash elements, with focus on interactivity and communication."

"Reba has always had a uniquely close relationship with her fans. The website gives more access than ever with the personal touch people expect from Reba. It is designed so that the participant feels at home, almost as if you were sitting in your own living room chatting with Reba and hearing the latest directly from her," Dutil said. "In addition to being information packed, Reba's website is exciting, adventurous and layered so deep it will likely take more than a single visit to see. I feel like we accomplished our goal and hope everyone will be amazed with what's found at www.reba.com."

Reba.com is made of several unique areas, including the Lounge where visitors can literally sit back and enjoy a multimedia experience that features Reba's albums, movies, and her book with audio and video clips available at the touch of a finger. For the collector, vital information on every one of her albums is easily accessible. There is an interactive area called Reba.TV, which features three of Reba's music videos. Also, Reba.TV offers behind the scene information and music videos using streaming technology.

The site features a comprehensive fan-based area called RebaNet. Members will interact with each other through Chat, a central hangout for all RebaNet users, and Message Boards, an area to post messages for others within the community. A question can be asked of Reba personally through Ask Reba. Reba Review is an online version of the popular fanclub newsletter, and RebaNews is the latest news and information sent via email. Members have access to behind the scenes information and photos almost as soon as events happen.

There is also a special Tour area, where users get official tour date information as well as a taste of the tour experience. As a RebaNet member, users visit exclusive areas such as All-Access, packed with the latest news from the tour, and The Roadzine, a tour related feature highlighting members of the band and crew. RebaNet members also have the opportunity to send tour related photos and have them posted on the site.

Reba.com is produced by Dutil and developed by Mediarevolution and Judds, Inc. Mediarevolution has built a reputation for award winning creativity by developing some of the most compelling and cutting-edge websites and games on the internet such as: Air Force One, Fox Kids Video,

FX Networks, and The Fifth Element. Judds, Inc has recently been credited for the co-development of the highly successful Martha Stewart website.

AutoWeb Interactive Awarded PC Magazine's 'Top 100 Website' Designation

DATE: September 9, 1997 09:09 EDT WORD COUNT: 511

SANTA CLARA, Calif., Sept. 9 /PRNewswire/ -- AutoWeb Interactive, the leading on-line auto superstore, announced that it was awarded PC Magazine's "Top 100 Websites" designation for the fourth consecutive quarter. Joining brands such as Microsoft and Federal Express, it is one of only 21 sites that is commerce-oriented. Editor criteria for award selection included an evaluation of the site's content, structure, graphics, dimension, motion, sound, interactivity, and timeliness. The prestigious award is further proof that, for on-line auto purchases, the place to park your browser is at AutoWeb Interactive.

"We are on the cutting-edge of electronic commerce," said Frank Zamani, president and CEO of AutoWeb. "Dealers and customers have long been noticing what editors at PC Magazine have also recognized -- AutoWeb is a quality on-line service that is redefining the way that Americans shop for automobiles. Our impressive growth rate, which included the addition of 75 dealers in July and 140 in August, is a further testament to the power of buying and selling cars through cyber marketing. At AutoWeb, we had more than 76,000 purchase requests during the past month alone."

The magazine said in its review of the site: "Before tangling with a car salesman, do your homework on the Internet, so that when you hit the dealership or used-car lot, you'll know as much as (the dealer) does. AutoWeb arms you with all the facts and figures for new and used cars. And some dealers provide free estimates on-line, so you can comparison-shop from home." The full review can be found at: <http://www8.zdnet.com/pcmag/special/web100/autoweb.htm>.

Not just a supercharged database and website, AutoWeb is known for the personal attention it gives to its customers and dealers. Every on-line automobile purchase request is followed up by calls from AutoWeb to both the customer and the dealer to ensure that each party is satisfied with the transaction.

About AutoWeb Interactive

AutoWeb Interactive is the leading on-line brand for new and used cars, where informed, motivated buyers are put in touch with an exclusive network of the highest ranking dealers in the U.S. and Canada. Using AutoWeb Interactive, consumers can inquire about car availability and pricing, secure a loan, finalize their purchase, schedule delivery, or advertise their used car for sale. An on-line auto superstore, AutoWeb Interactive is the only automotive website ever to receive PC Magazine's "Top 100 Website" Award. Founded in November 1994, AutoWeb Interactive (<http://www.autoweb.com>) currently has a member network of more than 1,000 auto dealers served by five sales offices in North America. Accessible through the World Wide Web, AutoWeb Interactive receives more than 15 million visits and processes more than 76,000 purchase requests per month. For more information, contact AutoWeb Interactive, 100 Saratoga Ave., Second Floor, Santa Clara, Calif. 95051. ABSTRACT: Telemarketing is at a peak in popularity. Predictions for telemarketing in the future include: 1. As more organizations use telemarketing to raise funds, it is important to do better than the competition in targeting the message, using more creative approaches than in the past. 2. There will be an increase in the use of monthly donor programs with active donor files. 3. Telemarketing will be employed to recruit as well as nurture major donors. 4. There will be a greater use of existing donor information for telemarketing. 5. More creativity in copy and package design will be used in the collection or fulfillment process. In an interview, one fund -raising expert noted that personalization is the key concept for telemarketing in 1987. This may be accomplished by programs that include research on giving motivation and the development of a personal relationship with key donors. The "votes" cast through deductible contributions generate a measure of preferences that is in...

...solidifies the description of balloting through the tax system.

Finally, Part IV goes beyond the charitable deduction and campaign finance examples to return to the social choice questions that are at...

...Somewhat surprisingly, and in contrast to the Internal Revenue Service instructions for such things as charitable deductions,<sup>8</sup> the instructions to Form 1040 appear to encourage positive responses by puffing that...in their combined hands.<sup>23</sup> Put this way, the checkoff resembles a variety of private fundraising schemes and seems like a reasonable tool of social choice, especially where alternatives to it...procedure is more like the taxes as ballots scheme reflected in the tax deduction for charitable contributions.

I have already alluded to the notion that a concern about collective action arising...

In both settings, however, erratic fundraising histories can make each willing cooperator uncertain about how to respond in order to generate...is used for funding publicly financed election campaigns while a deduction is used for funding charitable giving. ## II. BALLOTING THROUGH THE CHARITABLE DEDUCTION

A. The Charitable Deduction as a Social Choice Mechanism

Readers familiar with the vast literature on the charitable deduction, and on the associated exemption from income tax available to organizations that are on...

...worthy causes.' The taxes as ballots idea has its origin in these earlier suggestions. The charitable deduction makes the government a partner in every gift-giving venture; a taxpayer in the...
...the amounts generated by the matching scheme.

An obvious objection to the use of the charitable deduction as a social choice mechanism to determine government spending is that many citizens effectively...

...is distasteful deviation from the one-person-one-vote ideal. It is as if the charitable deduction institutes something of a poll tax, because one can only "vote," and thus influence...

...personal and government funds, but also to develop a sense of commitment to the chosen charities . Thus, they become involved individually as volunteers in ways that they would not if their tax money were simply allocated to the charities by the legislature or by government bureaucrats. It is also plausible that citizens tolerate greater...

...on public goods when they take the lead in identifying the objects of government (and personal ) munificence than they would if the government simply collected taxes and spent money directly on similar causes. It may be that a majority of voters or legislators supports...after collecting the necessary funds through higher tax rates, much as other governments offer no charitable deduction in their income tax systems but engage in more centrally organized social welfare programs...

...benefits its members by increasing rent-seeking activity. It is arguable, for example, that the charitable deduction is palatable to Congress both because most of the beneficiary organizations, unlike profit-oriented...

...over others than they would gain from such favoritism. The optimistic alternative is that the charitable deduction can be viewed as a precommitment by Congress to refrain from exercising power (and...

...deduction.

But why deductions rather than credits-and, in particular, why the deduction approach to charities and the checkoff scheme for financing campaigns? The choice between deductions and credits is available...

...abdication.

In contrast, as a matter of gathering information about majoritarian or other preferences, the charitable deduction may be a relatively clever tool, and a comparison with the full credit quality...

...checkoff scheme may provide the means to appreciate the deduction.

Imagine a system that encouraged charitable giving and helped the government allocate funds to and among charities by offering taxpayers a full credit for all qualified gifts or for gifts up to...

...buying these votes.' Much as politicians sometimes seek to buy votes from registered voters,<sup>65</sup> charities might buy the tax-credited transfers from "donors."<sup>65</sup> Charities would be in a significantly better position than are politicians to contract in this manner, even assuming comparable reputational and criminal deterrents. Politicians are hampered by the secret ballot, but charities could be certain that colluding donors had done their part. A donor might fail to...

...already exhausted the available credit, but neither of these possibilities is of concern to the charity ." In sum, one problem with costless votes in the form of full credits for charitable donations is that charities might compete too vigorously for these funds.<sup>68</sup> This competition would greatly reduce the likelihood...

...either extracting information about respondents' true preferences or encouraging individual involvement in (or monitoring of) charitable works.

A second, and perhaps less interesting, argument is that voters might take their votes...

...carefully about allocating government funds (in the form of the matching function played by the charitable deduction) when there is a personal net cost than when there is not (as would be the case with a full credit, a checkoff among candidate charities , or a more conventional ...advise on the allocation of public funds for higher education.

A further advantage of the charitable deduction returns us to the collective action problem that may be associated with aggregating preferences in order to determine an expenditure level.<sup>69</sup> The charitable deduction scheme permits a kind of ongoing vote. If a donor's decision as to...

...as well, depends on other contributors' decisions, then this uncertain donor can receive information regarding charities ' receipts as the year progresses. In fact, the conventional explanations for the spurt of charitable giving in December, that taxpayers earn deductions most efficiently with this timing<sup>70</sup> or that they...

...waiting until year's end provides the opportunity for more informed decisionmaking.<sup>71</sup> Correspondingly, some charities appeal to a certain subset of donors by stressing their dire needs as the year...

2. Information gathering prior to contributing or other balloting.

This distinction between the charitable deduction and more conventional ballots-or even less conventional checkoff need not be as stark...

...enough information to make ongoing disclosure (with conventional balloting or tax deduction schemes) unnecessary. If charities did not try to stimulate giving with interim reports, it may well be that they...

...set it aside, returning to my analytically defensible intuition that one advantage of balloting through charitable donations (as precursors to later deductions) is a reduction in the collective choice problem associated...be raised. However, the transaction costs do not seem worth the candle.

C. Rethinking the Charitable Deduction: Balloting, Partial Credits, and Floors

1. Alternatives to the charitable deduction.

Students of tax policy are familiar with the choice between deductions and equivalent partial...

...is subject to a marginal tax rate of 50 percent is indifferent between the present charitable deduction and a 50 percent credit. The substitution can be perfected through decisions about the...

...do not fare well in the normatively minded tax policy literature.<sup>9</sup>

The deduction for charitable giving occupies something of a middle ground. On one hand, it surely represents an attempt...

...is more appropriate, because the system may seek to measure income after the payment of charitable contributions (and even medical expenses"i) and not before. However, the availability of the deduction...

...dues-is a bit difficult to rationalize. Indeed, one explanation for the use of a charitable deduction rather than a partial credit may be that it is politic to deploy the...

...subtle argument is that we should imagine what the world would be like without the charitable deduction and with the government making many more and many larger direct grants. Tax collections...

...to imagine increased rates with progressivity comparable to that which we presently find with a charitable deduction in place. If so, high-income citizens would pay more than their proportional share...

...filers have equal votes, but then perhaps a greater credit or deduction for filers whose charitable contributions exceed a specified percentage of their income. There may therefore be an argument for the charitable deduction to resemble other deductions that are available only when expenses of the particular kind...

...Eliminating the advantages of wealth.

The preceding Part suggested that there are arguments for the charitable deduction as opposed to a system of credits, and that there is an argument for that choice with respect to charitable giving. The important point is that the taxes as ballots perspective offers both positive and...

...PRIVATE SECTOR

A. Collective Action and Allocation Without Government Involvement

1. An overview of umbrella charities .

Many of the themes discussed thus far have close counterparts in other arrangements where there...

...in themselves and offer relevant insights into the issues discussed in this Article.

Consider the fundraising and allocation strategies adopted by regional United Way organizations or other umbrella entities that offer donors and constituent organizations economies of scale in fundraising and perhaps in monitoring and allocating funds as well. A rough, greatly overgeneralized, history runs...

...century, social entrepreneurs had the idea of capitalizing on the available economies of scale in fundraising and in monitoring recipients of funds by presenting a unified front to potential contributors. Potential donors would no longer be besieged by multiple requests and fundraising events, and individual charities would be freed from the task of fundraising . Moreover, large employers, disinclined to permit multiple solicitations of their employees, could be encouraged to participate in a unified fundraising campaign. These umbrella organizations, predecessors of the modern United Way, Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, and Community Chest organizations, offered central planning, monitoring, and professional fundraising in return for the payment of reasonable expenses. Organizations could in some cases be thought...

...ventures through these umbrella entities. Constituent organizations were sometimes required to pledge to refrain from fundraising (either generally or only during particular months of the year) in order to avoid the...

...of the temptation to enjoy the umbrella's fruits while also exploiting the suddenly spacious fundraising field.

One obvious problem with such an arrangement is how to allocate funds from an...

...entities. Formulas relying on preventure budgets could not survive in the long run as new charities appeared. The dominant arrangement seems to have been that the umbrella organization, armed with much...

...have emerged. The major slippage has been with that part of the arrangement banning concurrent fundraising . Modern agreements display great variety as to the permissibility of constituent fundraising ; it is not unusual for a large local charity , such as a hospital, to receive grants from the United Way even as it raises...

...that receive nothing but restricted donations, because their comparative advantage could lie entirely in the fundraising department and not at all in the allocation among constituents, where internal politics could lead...

...only to constituents that have explained their function. This "explaining" is often the process of fundraising itself.<sup>92</sup>

2. United Ways and alternative mechanisms for fund allocation.

We come finally to the allocation problem that is most like that which I have associated with the charitable deduction and the tax checkoff. To the extent that donors send in unrestricted funds to...

...the restricted or earmarked character of the funds that have been received by this umbrella fundraiser. There are four possibilities. The first is for the umbrella to set out a formula...umbrella had planned to allocate to it. A similar situation may occur within any given charity's budget and fundraising calculations-donors often wish to affect project decisions, while managers regard themselves as better informed...

...which is the most interesting in analytic terms. The umbrella might offer itself as a fundraiser and allocative intermediary such that undesignated funds are distributed according to the relative amounts received...

...of taxes as ballots." In this setting, however, the contributions provide greater leverage than the charitable tax deduction alone. A contribution of $1,000 to the United Way designated for the...

...constituents, or that it is a good thing to encourage other donors to give to charity by extending the levers offered by the United Way. But the flaws in the collective...

...potent) designated contributions. In short, the analogy between umbrellas' allocations and governmental funding by the charitable deduction is interesting, but it is by no means clear that either sector has muchwhich charities to support.<sup>97</sup> The initiator in this second category may also intend to encourage gift...

...when a large donor to a law school challenges recent graduates (or the dean's fundraising ability) by announcing that the donor will match $1 million in gifts given by some...

...as looking for "votes" of confidence on the part of the target group. If the charity can demindeed thousands of small voters will sacrifice for this charity, then the large donor is duly impressed. This view is supported by the oft-heard...

...than $2 million will be raised; in either case his gift effectively is not matched. Fundraisers do not report delayed responses following a matching offer, although it is possible that most...

...necessary information and then respond if they are matched on the margin. Put differently, the charitable deduction is in a sense superior to most matching programs. Most match initiators have set...

...The second kind of matching program bears more resemblance to the balloting generated by the charitable deduction. The most common example is an employer who matches individual employee contributions. Whether or...

...there are limits on the amounts that will be matched or on the types of charities that can benefit from these programs, there is obviously a significant allocative task performed by...

...vote on the question of where to contribute the amount budgeted by the employer for charitable giving, but voting is instead done in a proportional manner such that every vote counts...

...of its way. In this context, however, management may care more about the principle of charitable giving or about public relations than about the precise identities of the charities it supports. Management is likely to concentrate on reducing workplace dissatisfaction and campaigning rather than preferring some charities to the exclusion of others.

IV. MORE BALLOTTING THROUGH TAXES

The examples of direct democracy through proportional voting that we have seen in both the campaign finance checkoff and the charitable deduction raise the question of whether we might engage in more direct democracy of this might expect our representatives in Congress to avoid extending the checkoff scheme to their fundraising "M and to avoid delegation where organized interest groups currently invest heavily to influence legislation

...when there is some desire to encourage private action (such as volunteering for the charities to which one contributes) or where the people have more information than their legislators. This last point may help to explain the tax deduction for charitable contributions and even the proportional voting character of the ballot represented by that tool. Voters across the...

...to something slightly less than that. Congress could borrow from some of the umbrella fundraisers' practices by appropriating a portion of the foreign aid budget legislatively and then allowing individuals to...to reclaim for itself the decisionmaking authority that it has delegated away through the charitable deduction. This may be because the charitable deduction is politically popular, or it may reflect a recognition that the deduction is a very...evidence of taxpayers' explanations for their responses, and the fact that many citizens give charitable contributions of as little as $3 all contribute to my inclination to think of these responses...

' These possibilities would of course be quite important to the charity if the system were structured so that the Treasury paid money to the charity only after the taxpayer "checked-off" that charity on her tax return. However, a charitable contribution credit would be unlikely to have such a structure, because this sort of exercise in direct democracy would have two significant disadvantages: it would require charities to wait until year's end for funds, and it would generate significant administrative costs for the government, since funds would be distributed to a large number of charities, unlike the small number of recipients of campaign finance funding. Consequently, it is a fairly safe assumption that a charitable credit system would have respondents contribute to charities directly, and then file for the credit. Under such a system, the charities that had bribed taxpayers would have their money in hand, so they would have no reason to care whether any taxpayer actually filed the credit, although any charity would of course fear detection of their bribe.

66 If the system were structured as a checkoff or a write-in in which the government made payment to the charity only after the taxpayer claimed the credit on the charity's behalf, this problem would be lessened somewhat. Charitable Impulse + Capital Gains Strategies = Donor-Advised Funds.
... few years ago, he knew he wanted to devote a portion of his assets to charity. Although his family already had a private charitable foundation, Patrick and his wife Hilda bumped into an obscure tax problem: Because of complex rules governing closely held corporations, the Patricks' charitable giving would "count" more--both for the charities they supported and on their returns -- if they made their gift directly to a public charitable organization rather than the family foundation. With capital gains taxes looming, the Patricks had a...

Most donors arrive, like the Masseys, with a general charitable impulse, rather than specific causes, coupled with a desire to build the community. "MACHERS": FUNDRAISING AND LEADERSHIP IN THE CHICAGO JEWISH COMMUNITY (ILLINOIS, FUND-RAISING)

...barriers to assimilation? In the case of Chicago Jewry, I argue that it is the fundraising activity by various nonprofit institutions that holds the ethnic group together. Using participant observation and in-depth interview data, I investigate the role of fundraising in the construction of an identifiable Jewish community in Chicago.

There is more to fundraising in the Chicago Jewish community than the mere collection and distribution of resources. An organization's relationship to the fundraising process determines its influence in the ethnic community. Individual leadership in the community is likewise determined through achievements in fundraising. Leaders of the ethnic community are not democratically elected nor randomly selected. One's willingness...

...the community.

The ethnic identity of the community-at-large is also influenced by the fundraising process. I demonstrate that the process of collecting money binds the Chicago Jewish community together. The fundraising process provides activity for thousands of volunteers who want personal involvement in the community. The solicitation process educates potential donors about the immediate needs and...

...in whatever amount offers a sense of connectedness to the ethnic community. These aspects of fundraising are the primary mechanisms by which individuals express their ethnic identity.

This study provides a...

...that ethnicity is instead a social construction based upon the creation of ethnic institutions via fundraising. In other words, what holds an ethnic group together is no longer simply a feeling...
